

ABSTRACT

A method to correct the intensities of an absorption image for light scattered within foreground tissue. Specifically the amount of light scattered between the focal plane of the probe and the tissue surface is estimated from the image. This scattered light contribution

5 is then subtracted from the original image.